BIOGRAPHY

Tim Benjamin concentrates his practice on defending medical malpractice suits on behalf of large health care entities and individual health care providers. Tim also has experience representing health care providers in disciplinary matters. He particularly enjoys developing efficient and effective strategies that allow the health care provider to return to what they do best - rendering care to patients.

Prior to joining Blankingship & Keith, Tim worked at a national law firm handling a variety of matters, including defending health care providers. He also has experience in other civil litigation matters, including insurance coverage, professional malpractice, complex tort, premises liability, products liability, and employment law.
